Information About All Our Visitors

We collect certain information from and about our users in three ways – directly from the user, from our Web server logs, and with cookies.

User-Supplied Information: When you register on our site, respond to a question or request, complete a form, or post your information, we may ask for various information such as your name, e-mail address, mailing address, phone number and other personal information. You may, however, visit our site anonymously.

Server Log Information: When you visit an Internet site, you disclose certain information about yourself, such as your Internet [Protocol] (IP) address, the time of your visit, and the referring location (e.g., the site page that offered a link to our site page). Like many other sites, we record this basic information about visits to this site.

Cookies: In order to offer and provide customized, personal service, we may use cookies to store and help track your information. These cookies are relatively standard and do not collect personally identifiable information. Nor do we combine information collected through cookies with other personally identifiable information to tell us who you are or even what your username or e-mail address is. If for any reason you wish not to take advantage of cookies, you may have your browser not accept them, although this may disable or render unusable some of the features of our site.

You should remember that whenever you voluntarily disclose information online, such as on message boards, through e-mail, discussion groups, or in chat areas, your information can be collected and used by others. Although we try to protect your information, we cannot ensure or warrant the security of any information you transmit to us, and you do so at your own risk. You are solely responsible of maintaining the secrecy of any passwords you set up and/or any account information.
